idmA new species of the genus

Xylopsocus Papp (Coleoptera:

Tenebrionidae) from Guizhou, China, with comments on the generic diagnosis and the first diagnosis of the genus Xylopsocus Brullé. The genus Xylopsocus was first erected by Brullé in 1832 as a subgenus of Xylopsocus Constant, 1860.

Xylopsocus was considered a valid genus with diagnostic characters: mesofemur and mesotibia of the male with dark marks; inner portion of male valvifer very broad; male phallus with one process that is thick and dorsally projecting; and inner margin of female aedeagus with a narrow spine. Subsequently, Xylopsocus was removed to the tribe

Eulophini by Hsia in 1979. Hsia indicated that there were differences in the male genitalia and female genitalia between Xylopsocus and Eulophus. In addition, the female genitalia of the species in Xylopsocus are different from those of the species in Eulophus by characteristics of the sacculus and paragenital groove. Hsia also indicated that aedeagi of the species in Xylopsocus have different shapes. He also indicated that Xylopsocus is a valid genus and includes three species (X. deserticola Hsia, 1979, X. longicornis (Brullé, 1832) and X. shanghaiensis Hsia, 1982). However, the species in Xylopsocus are similar to Eulophus. We collected a new species, X. leishanensis sp. nov., from Jianshui, Guizhou, China and compare it with species in Eulophus
